Apple Adapter Available as Accessory

DL-AP joins 30-pin to HDMI and Lightning to HDMI adapters to DL-AR

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colorado—January 29, 2014—Liberty AV Solutions announced the immediate availability of the latest accessory for the successful DL-AR adapter ring: the DL-AP. The DL-AP provides conversion and compatibility between Apple Brand sources (including both 30-pin and Lightning) and HDMI destinations.

“Last year we launched our DL-AR adaptor ring to specifically address missing and incompatible connectors in boardrooms, classrooms, auditoriums, and other presentation venues,” explains Ralph Parrett, Product Solution Engineer for Liberty. “The goal was to create a versatile, inexpensive converter that locks to an HDMI cable, and our success has generated a huge demand for new options.”

The new DL-AP is a white molded ABS clamp with a foam rubber spacer designed specifically for the Apple 30-pin to HDMI adapter (MD098ZM/A) and the Apple Lightning to HDMI adapter (MD826ZM/A). The Apple product clamp is secured to the DL-AR security cable with the same Torx security driver that is required to install the DL-AR.

With the addition of two DL-APs to a DL-AR installation, seven unique adapters can be available at a single HDMI connection: DisplayPort, Mini DisplayPort, Mini HDMI, Micro HDMI, DVI-D, Apple 30-pin, and Lightning.

The DL-AP and DL-AR are in stock and now shipping from authorized Liberty AV Solutions dealers across North America. Liberty AV Solutions is also stocking the Apple 30-pin to HDMI adapter (MD098ZM/A) and the Apple Lightning to HDMI adapter (MD826ZM/A) to simplify the part ordering process.
